

Summer Peacebuilding Institute 2026

Eastern Mennonite University
Hartzler Library

Welcome to EMU and the Hartzler Library. The library is here to support your coursework and research needs.

The library website (<https://emu.edu/library/>) is the starting point for access to library resources. You will find access to books, ebooks, journals and streaming videos here. “Search all the EBSCOhost databases” provides a single search for the databases we get through EBSCO including Academic Search Complete, PsycInfo, Atla Religion database and many more. For individual databases use the “Databases” link toward the bottom of the website.

Search EBSCO Databases

The Peacebuilding and Conflict Studies guide (<http://libguides.emu.edu/peacebuilding>) provides access to specific resources for this area of study. Included here you will find electronic access to many of the “Little Book” series. Look for the “Little Books” tab.

Check the library website to see when we are open. <https://emu.edu/library/hours>

SPI participants taking courses for credit

For SPI participants finishing your coursework away from EMU, and who will not have physical access to the Hartzler Library, the library provides these services:

- Access to library research databases through your EMU email address and password

- The library can scan and send via email journal articles and book chapters from print materials. If you require complete books we can mail items to you but we may not send heavily used items. Due to your location mailing materials may not be possible and staff will work with you to figure out alternatives
- Interlibrary loan services provide access to resources not owned by EMU. When full-text is not available most citations will have a “Request through Interlibrary Loan” option

- You are encouraged to make use of libraries in your home area if they have collections and resources which are helpful; all requests for print or online resources not owned by EMU should be made through EMUshare which is accessed through the library website. Use your full email address and password to login
- You are welcome to contact the library staff with your questions or if you need assistance – see contact information above.
